WELCOMES A LIFE SENTENCE

Botha Glad to Don the Stripes.

Does Not Think That He Deserves Even Imprisenment.

Tells of His Happy Life and Hopes Before Crime Blighted His Career.

YOT often has anyone been so absolutely pleased to be put into prison stripes as was Charles Botha yesterday when he was releved from the death watch and given the privileges of a life termer in the tate prison. He was as happy as a hild over the action of the Board of ardons in commuting his sentence of to callers who displayed an interest him he attempted vainly, with his wkward use of English, to express the gratitude which he felt toward all who had sught to do with his change of Boths, who is a splendid specimen of physical manhood, with large frame, is almost handsome in a way, in spite of his rather broad, Teutonic features, and yet, even in the hour of his really great triumph, there was a baleful icam in the sparkling eyes and an unpleasant working of the naturally mild features, when his mind dwelt upon the deed which brought him so uncomfort-ably close to the executioner's chair. "I cannot express myself well in vords" said Botha to a Tribune repre-entative. "Could I say what I feel to one would blame me for what I did. t some things I say are not under-od, and are used against me. I ac hankful more than I can tell to the Board of Pardons and the others who helped me get my sentence commuted yet I believe that I do not even icserve imprisonment.

"He Take My Wife."

"What could I do? What could any man do? I leave my wife at home then I go to work and I think she be here to meet me lovingly when I come there to meet the forming which is back. When I come back she is not there. I go to my neighbors and they say. Where your wife, Botha? She gone with Tibbetts. I go to another neighbor and he say the same thing. Then I become ashamed and so angry I know not what I do Could I forgive man who do that? He take my wife man who do that? He take my wife ie spoil my home-what more can he

"But I not intend to hurt my wife, "Even if she guilty I not harm her in any way. And I not be-lieve yet she guilty. I only believe that man he have great—what you call -influence over her and make her which he give her better home than I build. I loved her very much and I but her yet, in spite of all the trouble. When I talk about it my heart go very fast and I get slmost wild. Some can cry and then their heart feel lighter. I not cry and I feel like I will

Tells of Former Life.

Then the almost boyish looking prisoner told in broken sentences of his happy life on the claim before his wife was enticed away, of his preparations was enticed away, of his preparations to build a new house and otherwise imove his ranch, and how proud he was prove his ranch, and how proud he was that he was getting along in the world. He also told how some of his neighbors, whom he regarded as his friends, had turned against him when he got into trouble, claiming that he had on his place three big loads of lumber, $125 worth of posts and $60 worth of other building material, which he engaged one man to look after, and he afterward learned that this man had taken way all of his movable property and hen had sworn falsely against him, but he might not be able to return to

"I will show people by my good con-uct in prison." he said in conclusion, that I am not so bad as many have elieved. I never harmed anyone beore. I never saw a prison till I came re. I was raised in a strict family, mething like the Puritans. I was ught to respect the laws of God and an. I never hardly knew what crime as till that man took my little wife, thought everybody was good, but I lined more since that of what people ally are than I could in twenty-five ars as I had lived before."

Upholds Wife's Virtue. peculiar feature of Botha's case to A peculiar feature of Botha's case is he faith in his wife's virtue which he till proclaims. It is the very thing which came so near costing him his fe. He would probably never have the convicted of murder in the first egree had it been alleged at his trial hat criminal intimacy had existed be-ween the couple he killed. Not only that he not claimed or prover. but this not claimed or proven, but otha himself insisted that there had on no criminal intimacy.

PRELATE IS EN

Salt Lake has a distinguished guest in the Most Rev. Francis Redwood, S. M. Archbishop of Wellington, New Zealand, who, with his secretary, Very Rev. Dean Smith, S. M., is a guest of the Marist fathers of All Hallows cotlege. The eminent prelate arrived last Saturday evening from San Francisco and wile pass a few days in the city before continuing his journey enetward. After visiting several cities en route he will go direct to Reme to pay his official visit to the Pope, which visit is made about once every ten years.

A most interesting gentleman is the erchbishop and he is not only famed for his eloquence and administration of affairs of the church in New Zenland, but he is his eloquence and administration of affairs of the church in New Zealand, but he is also a lover of music and plays the violin like an artist. He is the possessor of a rare old Stradrvarius.

Although an Englishman, he went to New Zealand as a child and later went back to Europe for his education. He studied at Monthel, the Marist college in the south of France, with Archbishop Ireland and Bishop of Gorman of Sloux Falls. He was ordained a priest by the Archbishop of Dublin in Manoath college and later taught divinity classes in Dublin. He was consecrated Bishop of Wellington by Cardinal Manning, then an Archbishop of Westminster, London, and was raised to the archbishopric in 185, a position he has since held, having supervision over the three sees of New Zealand.

He talks most entertainingly of his bome and travels and gives a good account of New Zealand its resources and Government. The country is very prosperous and social conditions are such that harmony prevails among all classes and labor agitations are unknown. The Government owns the railronds, telephones and telegraph lines and the service is aplendid. The cities own the public works of all kinds.

But his fondness for New Zealand does not prevent him from having a high opinion of the United States and American institutions. He has made several visita to this country and says he is always interested in passing through and noting on every hand the vast improvements.

He will remain here a day or two longer. Father Guinan took his guests for a drive about the city yesterday, but the reg of the programme for his entertainment has not been decided.
